Focus on Poindexter

WASHINGTON - Lieutenant Colonel Oliver L. North's testimony Tuesday made clear that one of the most important questions in the Iran-contra affair - whether the president knew about the diversion of Iranian arms sales profits to the Nicaraguan rebels cannot be fully answered until a congressional appearance next week by Rear Admiral John M. Poindexter.

Colonel North said that he assumed he had President Ronald Reagan's permission to funnel the profits of the arms sales to the contras, and that he had sent about five memos to Admiral Poindexter, the former national security adviser, seeking Mr. Reagan's approval for the diversion.

While Colonel North said none of the memos was returned with the president's signature or initials, "I thought that I had received authority from the president" through Admiral Poindexter. Colonel North said he later shredded copies of the documents.

It is now left for Admiral Poindexter to say whether he received the memos and whether they or their contents were ever shared with the president. It is possible the admiral may even have one of the memos

A'Misjudgment,' Denies Personal Financial Gain

WASHINGTON — Lieutenant Colonel Oliver L. North conceded Vednesday that he had hade made the "grossest misjudgment" of his life last fall when he backdated letters to cover up his acceptance of a home security system as a gift. But he insisted, in his second day of congressional testimony, that "I never took a penny that didn't belong to me" during his actions in the Iran-contra affair.

Congress has already been told that the security system was apparently paid for out of proceeds from the secret U.S. sale of weapons to

Colonel North, a former National Security Council aide, said that at the insistence of the CIA director, William J. Casey, he took along "the means to take my own life" when he made a secret trip to Iran last year to seek the release of American hostages in Lebanon.

"I did not tell my wife and children that," the 43-year-old marine officer, appearing in uniform, testified during televised hearings. And they may be hearing it today for the first time."

Despite his confession of error on the security system, Colonel North said that he and his family were targets of possible assassination by the international terrorist Abu Nidal and that the U.S. government was unwilling to provide any protection.

Thus, he said, he needed a security system and was relieved when Richard V. Secord offered to arrange for one. Mr. Secord is a retired Air Force major general who was a key operative in the Irancontra affair and who controlled Swiss bank accounts believed to contain proceeds from the sale of gress had refused to grant the rebels aid. Admiral Poindexter has resigned his post and is expected to be questioned later by Congress. Colonel North told the Senate and House investigating commit-that proceeds from the arms sales were deposited with the U.S. Treasury if he had received orders to that effect. Colonel North also denied that President Ronald Reagan had told him it was "important that I not know" about the diversion of profits to the contras.

"I don't recall the conversation that way," Colonel North told John W. Nields Jr., counsel to the House members. Mr. Nields was asking about a phone call on Nov. 25 from Mr. Reagan to Colonel North, who had just been dismissed from the National Security Council staff after the affair broke into the news.

WASHINGTON — Representative Les Aspin, chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, says that major discrepancies have become apparent between U.S. and Kuwaiti interpretations of the plan to escort Kuwaiti oil tankers through the Gulf.

At a news conference reporting on the trip, Mr. Aspin said it was not clear whether the U.S. or Kuwaiti interpretation would prevail. But he predicted that the discrepancy could lead to substantial delays in the escort plan if Kuwait prevails. The escort missions are due to start July 16.

"If the Kuwaitis are right and we accept their plan and we have to go back to the drawing boards, the chances of this escort operation taking place anytime soon are pretty near nil," he said. In explanations to Congress, Mr.

Aspin said. U.S. officials had outlined a plan under which 11 Kuwaiti tankers would have U.S. Navy escorts through the Gulf as they make round-trip voyages to their final destinations, such as European ports.

But, he said, the Kuwaitis said their plan called for a shuttle operation in which the 11 escorted tank-

U.S. Naval Activities in Gulf Leave Britain and France Uneasy

By James M. Markham

New York Times Service PARIS - France and Britain, who have considerable experience in the Guif, are watching the Reagan administration's activities there with some anxiety while also offering Washington support for a United Nations Security Council resolution intended to put new pressure on Iran.

Both Britain and France maintain a naval presence in the Gulf region, although only the British Navy actually escorts civilian vessels through the waterway. Court Nominee Describes Evolution of His Views

By Stuart Taylor Jr.

New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — Judge Robert H. Bork, whose nomination to the Supreme Court has engaged President Ronald Reagan in an ideological battle with Senate liberals, says that he was not asked his views or asked to make commitments on specific issues before Mr. Reagan chose him last week.

"Nobody has ever on this job or any other jobs asked for any commitments," Judge Bork said in an hourlong interview on Tuesday. "I was never interviewed as to where I stood on anything."

Judge Bork, whose positions on many legal issues are widely known from his years as a judge and scholar, otherwise limited himself to questions about his personal background and the evolution of his views. Now the Star Witness

Keep Looking Up

Oliver North began his long-awaited testimeny on the Iran-contra affair by scolding Congress for insufficient loyalty to the Nicaraguan rebels. That story line ran throughout the appearance of the marine licutenant colonel who would be king or loyal servant, depending on whose testimony the congressional committee will find credible. With the network cameras trained on him, Colonel North held tenaciously to the policy convictions that produced two whopping national embarrassments in Iran and Central America. He showed a studied indifference to the issues before the committees: law and accountability.

Law, duly enacted by Congress and signed by the president, prohibited government support for the contras and trading with terrorist Iran. Accountability to the public demanded fidelity to the administration's proclaimed policy of no ransom for hostages. Any departure by covert action required at least confidential briefings for a few key members of Congress. The chairman, Daniel Inouye, did not exaggerate when he told the witness that his behavior suggested he was "above the law."

What does Colonel North think of accountability? "I didn't want to show Congress a single word on this whole thing," he restified. Under the law's compulsion he nevertheless spilled some beans. At times he supported President Reagan's claim of ignorance about the diversion of profits from Iranian arms sales to the contras. Yet the witness admitted sending five or more messages seeking Mr. Reagan's approval for the diversion and said he "assumed" that he had obtained that approval. And although he resoundingly denied soliciting contra aid money from rich private donors, he admitted setting up Oval Office meetings with the president for some of those donors.

Judgment on this evidence, whether incriminating or exonerating, must await completion of the colonel's testimony, perhaps even completion of the hearings. Much hinges on his credibility, which was hardly enhanced by many of his answers. For example, when he was questioned about the destruction of documents, he clung to the story that shredding was routine, a White House line that even his secretary, Fawn Hall, abandoned under oath. In the next breath he told of his efforts to destroy every document that might politically damage Mr. Reagan.

As the star witness insisted, he was not alone in his awareness of the Iran arms deals, the diversion of arms profits to the Nicaraguan war and all the cover-ups in between. Not has he been alone in trying to transform the hearings into a debate on administration policy. But most committee members show every sign, and rightly, of keeping the cam-eras focused on lawlessness in high places. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

A Revealing Start

Oliver North acknowledged on Tuesday that at one time or another he had told a "bald-faced lie" to the Iranians; helped "fix" testimony to Congress by William Casey, the since deceased CIA director; taken a role in preparing a false chronology in the White House; passed misleading in-formation to President Reagan; misled the CIA and told a false story to Richard Secord. He also insisted that he was a truthful man, doing presidentially authorized service, whose intent was never to deceive the American people but to keep American adversaries in the dark by protecting covert operations. Pressed at one point, he flashed a bit of temper, telling the assembled mem-bers of Congress it was a good thing that others had cared more for the Nicaraguan resistance "than this body here,"

Investigators had several days left to try to augment the public record with information drawn from the highly articulate but, when it comes to hard facts, parsimonious marine officer. Already it is evident, however, that the world of Oliver North is very different from the world in which so many other Americans reside. The world of Oliver North is one in which official missions take precedence, secrecy is the normal mode, shredders are a routine office machine and there is no room for doubts or constitutional scruples of any observable sort. It is a world in which the line between official and personal purposes was so blurred that Oliver North could refer to "my private U.S. operation."

This is the man who flourished in Ronald Reagan's White House. As much as anyone there, he had the commitment and resourcefulness and, with his military background, the special skills to step up to the hard cases, the ones where the cabinet, the bureaucracy, the legislature or the public were putting obstacles in the way of some of the president's favorite foreign policy designs. It evidently did not occur to him that there might be reasons of public policy, not to speak of constitutional reasons, why someone acting in the name of the commander in chief could not simply do what the mission required.

Now he is being called to account in a demanding public forum which is strange to him and whose inquiries he resists. The first day of his testimony was revealing.

Democrats on Trade

One of the arguments in the American, some reservations and calls for more compresidential campaign that could end up really mattering is the one over trade. The Democrats, historically the party of free World economies depend. That, however, is Democrats, historically the party of free trade, now have seven candidates with divergent positions, some rather good and some dangerously bad.

Start with the bad. Richard Gephardt campaigns as a man who can get things national agreement to require any country done, and one of the things he has done is to that runs a significant trade surplus to rebill would threaten countries that run trade from all other countries - something that surpluses with the United States - Japan, would be hard to get and to police. Mr. South Korea and Taiwan mainly - with tariffs or quotas. But, as Joseph Biden pointed out in the "Firing Line" debate in Houston last Wednesday, and as Mr. Gep-hardt admits, only about 20 percent of the U.S. trade deficit can be blamed on other on industries such as shoes and textiles to countries' unfair practices. And as Bruce Babbitt says, "It makes no economic sense to say that every nation must balance individually with every other nation."

Mr. Gephardt has a point when he says that lower barriers could stimulate American firms to become better competitors. But his bill could easily result in higher barriers all around, with results you can read in any history of the 1930s. The Gephardt bill is the sort of thing you expect from a congressman from a heavy-industry district who wants to give his fellow partisans an issue for the next campaign, It is not what you expect or want from a president. Two other Democratic candidates, Jesse Jackson and Paul Simon, would vote for the Gephardt bill, although Mr. Jackson has probably an impractical idea.

The other four Democrats running oppose the Gephardt bill, but would not leave trade alone. Mr. Babbitt wants an interthe House to pass a bad trade bill. The duce it within three years or face tariffs Biden calls for converting import quotas to tariffs, with the proceeds to go for retraining - but such barriers are hard to get rid of and he favors some forms of automatic retaliation. Albert Gore favors restrictions protect U.S. industry. Michael Dukakis usefully points out that 6 million American jobs depend on exports, but he still favors some protection of industries in trouble.

Four years ago the Democratic debate on trade was over the United Auto Workers' demand for domestic content in manufacturing, this year's debate about the broader issue is a step forward. Not even Mr. Gephardt is just an errand boy for the unions.

The lesson of the past 40 years is that the United States and the world prosper when trade barriers are low and the volume of trade high. But even the best of the Democrats are too ready to endorse barriers and seem more worried about preserving the past than stimulating growth in the future. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

Watching Korea From China Farm Subsidies Are Attacked

The most ironic foreign comment on the dramatic political transformation in South Korea came from China. Beijing called the concessions by Seoul's hard-line rulers "a result of the struggle for democracy waged by the South Korean people."

Last winter the streets of major Chinese cities were filled - as in South Korea last month — with students protesting totali-tarian rule. But the result of "the struggle for democracy" in China was not concession but suppression.

To whatever extent Chinese students may be aware of the achievements of their South Korean contemporaries, they should take heart from the example that has been set, even while they are saddened at the fresh realization of how far their own struggle has to go.

- The Seattle Times.

The proposal by the United States to phase out all farm subsidies by the year 2000 is the most significant progress toward a return to sanity in agriculture for a long time. Reversing the policy of subsidizing the world's farmers to produce surplus food has been a prime objective of the British government for several years. A clear statement by the country which spends most on farm subsidies that it wants a reciprocal agreement to abandon them is worth much. Predictably the EC reaction to the U.S. proposals was less than wholeheartedly enthusiastic. Agricultural protectionism is still the dominant force in the Community - not least in the EC's two biggest members, France and Germany. Nevertheless the U.S. move should strengthen Britain's hand.

Let the United Nations Reflag Gulf Vessels

WASHINGTON — The specter of a widered conflict in the Gulf raised by prospective U.S. reflagging of Kuwaiti ships and provision of safe transit for Kuwaiti cargoes on Soviet vessels leased to Kuwait has created consternation in Congress, queasiness among U.S. allies and concern even in the Reagan administration. Despite the risks, Washington feels compelled grimly to press on for fear that retreat, in the words of the Senate majority leader, Robert C. Byrd, "would further injure the already severely damaged credibility of the United States." Without retreat or loss of credibility. America can attain its goal with substantially lower risk. It can meet its pledge to Kuwait and achieve its policy goals under the mantle of international sanction by supporting United Nations reflagging of nonmil-itary vessels in the Gulf.

This would not involve creation of United Nations naval flotilla patrolling the Gulf, as some have proposed. The United Nations is not an appropriate instrument of gunboat diplomacy. Rather, it is a unique in-strument for peacemaking diploma-cy. Its peacekeeping forces are widely respected and rarely attacked, even in zones of bitter conflict.

A peace-building mission would begin after passage of a Security Council resolution that endorsed freedom of navigation for peaceful shipping in the Gull, noted the perils to it from the ongoing conflict and called on all member states to safeguard innocent traffic from attack while efforts at ending the Iran-Iraq war continued.

A Council resolution should authoto accompany it, or a naval vessel from member states authorized by the Council to carry out this function.

The guiding principle of the United Nations reflagging plan is diplomatic deterrence, which is likely to be more effective than military determine furnished by a nervous superpower. Most important, such United Na-tions peace-building is in the interest of all parties involved. We recognize, of course, that our proposal would die stillborn if any permanent member of the Council vetoed it. We believe that this would not happen, because to do so would be to vote against the self-interest of every permanent member.

For Knwait, which initiated the enlarged American presence.

What about the beligerents themselves? Why should they respect the United Nations flag?

There is a general desire of Third World countries to bolster the credibility of the United Nations. And Iran and fraq would have to think twice before attacking vessels under the pro-tection of the international community, including the major powers.

For fram, the plan would make it more likely that international tankers going to its ports would safely transit the Gulf, thus removing an obstacle to oil exports. If han's oil traffic were saleguarded, its incentive to make retaliatory strikes against the shipping of its Arab neighbors would diminish. For Iraq, which initiated the attacks on tankers and remains the source of most of them, the United Nations offers the main hope of bringing the unwinnable war to an end. Nor can Iraq afford to ignore the wishes of the Arab Gulf states that have been bankrolling it and that want their shipping protected. Iraq has shown its willing-ness to step back from other face offs with the United Nations.

Above and beyond all this, given the nimosity between Iran and Iraq the United Nations must look to step by-step peace-building. Thus, shielding shipping from attack could be a stepping-stone toward a general cease-line that halted the land war.

This month an international panel of the United Nations Association of the USA will make recommendationson the conditions necessary for the United Nations to be successful in all security matters, as well as in economic and social development.

The recommendation presented here for a United Nations reflagging role in the Gulf meets the pane's key criteria for likely success. It serves the common security interests of all concerned, it can be rapidly implemented (at modest cost) and it draws on what the United Nations does best - mediate impartially from above the fray.

And Woes At the Bank

By Hobart Rowen

WASHINGTON — Suppose the P VV top management at your com-pany decided to trim the payroll by up to 10 percent to become more effito to percent to pecone there efficient. And it announced that while it figured out who should be fired, all jobs would be declared "open." Persons who kept their jobs would be "selected" back may employment. That is precisely what has been going on at the World Bank for the past two months, with the tradicipals.

two months, with the predictable ne-sult that morale is shot and work at a standstill. It is an open question whether the transmittened agency can regain enough spirit to do the important work it is supposed to do.

Mocen Quresh, the new senior vice president for operations promised in an interview that 90 to 95 percent of the staff would know where they stand by mid-luly, and that a revisalized Bank would get rolling in high geat-with lending exceeding 1986 without. The trouble began last year when Barber Countile, the World Bank's, new president, was contromed with the fact that its five leading member governments the United States, Britain, West Germany, Japan and France — had refused to ago the bank's budget. He decided that trusming the fat from a blossed bureau cracy would be his first priority..... Even some Countie supporters acknowledge that, with hindesets, there had to be a better plan. The way we did it, says a high staffer, "everybody was technically out of a job and wa hanging around to see if he or she was going to be retained and if so what the job would be. That caused predictable anxiety, tension and anger.

The problem is exacerbated by the fact that three-quarters of the bank staff are foreigners, in America on restricted visas that make them ineligible for the U.S. job market. Most came, as the West German never paper Die Welt put it, "thinking they had found a comfortable job for life." Get ting fired means going home. From Mr. Conable's perspective the major powers' refusal to sign his predecessor's last budget was a wasnng that administrative costs were too righ. He concluded that his self-assigned mission to push the bank into a lead role in dealing with Third World problems could not be managed until he had streamlined the organization. His right-hand man, former Repub-ican Representative William Stanton, says there was no time to wait: "Bar-ber bit the bullet. I don't know of any organization that's ever done anythin this big, voluntarily, to make itself more efficient and to bring it in line with its future responsibilities."

The top managers decided there were hundreds of employees whose skills no longer matched the bank's needs. And they knew the bank needed to hire experts with different skills

- environmentalists, for example. -- Mr.: Conable has regrouped operacamployees have been fired. The intal could go to 600. Those to be given the pink slip will get generous separation packages — so generous that the U.S. Treasury objected to the largess.

Most observers agree that the bank has long needed a shake-up. But the result in the short term has been close to bedlam. Some top-notch personnel who do not lit in the new structure have quit. Only 70 percent of apprair als for loans have been comple this year, against a 90 percent figure that would have been normal.

Disgruntled staff members mounted a bitter internal company against Mr. Conable, calling for his resignation. Anonymous critiques circulated. among the staff, some suggesting that econyism, nepotism and meisur had dominated the reorganization process and allocation of the best jobs.

Mr. Comable's aides say he knew all along that a reorganization that pro-posed to strip away dead wood and provide younger, more promising people over the heads of their seniors would cause temporary morals problems. But it was necessary, says one. There are no shortcuts to misking the last temporary more of the says to be a senior of the says of the bank more efficient and more responave to the needs of our customers, the governments of the Third World Responding to complaints by the U.S. and other governments, the bank will decentralize some operations, cas back on a lax travel policy, reduce the size of missions, climinate diplicating. functions and unify responsibilities for programs and projects in an effort to make some that the right and left hands know what each is doing.

What Ever Happened to the Left in Italy? A DECADE ago the Italian new left was a formidable institution. The number of Italians who remained committed in the late 1970s to movements for radical social change made the new left experience in other countries seem thin and distant. New left parties had deputies in Parliament. Three new left dailies were read nationally. The country had the social and political feel of Paris or New York's Upper West Side circa 1968, And that was just the half of it. There was the Italian Communist Party, too.

Here in a modern industrial state was a non-Stalinist Communist party that commanded the loyalty of nearly one-third of the electorate and talked realistically of becoming the governing party. The party of Gramsci, Togliatti and Berlinguer was famous for its incorruptibility in a scandal-ridden political culture and for its efficiency in municipal administration.

Today, new left organizations are as dead in Italy as they are everywhere else.

And the PCI? For years it has called no mass demonstrations, for fear attendance would be embarrassingly low. It has lost city after city in municipal elections in the 1980s. Its 1986 national congress seemed to confirm that the PCI has chosen the social democratic path. La Repubblica commented that "with this congress the PCI has officially left the Communist movement." With a quiescent radical left and a large "social democratic" party, Italy now looks like the rest of political Europe. It no longer seems exceptional. --- Lawrence Rosenthal in The Nation (New York).

For decades the Soviet Union has conducted an intense propaganda campaign against these broadcasts. They have been denounced as "instruments of the CIA" and "subversive radio stations." Soviet bitterness about the stations' role has sometimes left the impression in the West that the stations must be particularly strident and "propagandistic." In fact, they are among the most careful of Western radio stations, adhering to the strictest standards of journalistic objectivity and balance.

The stations have enormous appeal in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. In many countries Radio Free Europe has influence and stature hard to comprehend in the media-saturated West, Na-

Jerzy Urban, the Polish government spokesman, has stated, "If you would close down Radio Free Europe, the underground," meaning the Solidarity movement, "would cease to exist." Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty are no more a relic of the Cold War than is the Atlantic alliance. Both are important mainstream instruments of American foreign policy.

But the Soviet government's monopoly on information, denial of a free press and total control of all media are relics of the Dark Ages. The most appropriate response to Moscow's increased jamming of these broadcasts would be a clear national commitment to support this vital orga-nization, which is little appreciated in the West but highly valued by millions in the East.

'Covert' Means Lies Means Lost Credibility All Around

That did not seem to bother Colonel North, who insisted that the U.S. government must conduct covert operations - hence lie to the world and to its own people - in order to survive in a "dangerous world." Less zealous people well may question whether covert operations are all that necessary to the national interest, or whether a democratic government's lies to its own people are justified in order to protect such operations.

For obvious reasons, if covert operations are undertaken they do require lies, from start to finish, often from top to bottom. Other countries, particularly target countries, must be duped about what is happening and who is responsible. The lives of the secret operatives involved must be protected. The public and all but a designated few in Congress must not know the truth. That would give away the operation and endanger its participants - and might cause a damaging domestic political reaction as in the current instance.

If a covert operation should be revealed, the president must be able to deny that he knew anything about it, to protect his domestic and international reputation and credibility. But since only the president is supposed to authorize a covert operation, giving him "plausible demability" means that he must lie implicitly, and may be forced by disclosure to lie directly. Worse, he may

Behind Colonel North

THE committee counsel pressed Oliver North hard on the falsification of the "historic chronology" that was going out as the administration's version of the facts. Didn't he know that what he was putting into this chronology was false? Yes, said the colonel.

Who else knew it was false? John Poindexter and Robert McFarlane, both former national security advisers, Edwin Meese and maybe other high officials, Colonel North replied.

Didn't any of these officials come forward and protest that they were committing the president to something they knew to be untrue? Silence.

The colonel insisted that he did not believe that anything he had done was a violation of the law. At one point he said. "If you want to blame me, that's fine." But "at this point in time," as the colonel was forever saying, he is in trouble for obstructing justice. And if so, Mr. Meese, Admiral Poindexter, Mr. McFarlane and maybe some other higher officials are in trouble, too. -James Reston in The New York Times.

ly that he knew anything about U-2 flights over the Soviet Union.

Colonel North cited a meeting he attended at which Attorney General Edwin Meese as well as William Casey, then director of central intelligence, and other government officials knowingly approved for publication a false statement about arms sales to iran. That committed President Reagan and his administration to a lie, but the colonel said no one present objected to this; nor, he conceded, was the question even raised whether Mr. Reagan knew that this false information was to be circulated in the name of his administration. That is the kind of thing that inevitably happens when covert operations go forward. And what inevitably happens when these tricky enterprises go wrong -as they often do; witness Guatemala the Bay of Pigs, Chile, arms to Iran -is that someone, sometimes a president, even a country, loses credibility. Colonel North himself, although he did not seem to realize it, and despite his James Stewart appearance and his Ali-American manner, is a prime example.

He confessed to numerous falsehoods which he told to advance or protect the secret arms sales to Iran and the secret diversion of "residuals" (the immense diversion of "residuals" (the immense profits from the sales) to the "resistance" (the CIA-organized contras) in Nicaragua. He even "falsely told" Richard Second that he personally had informed Mr. Reagan of the diversion.

After so much lying, even for purposes that Colonel North considered participated in the contraction of the cont

triotic, his protestations that now he only wants to tell the truth are not worth much. Why should he be considered believable, even under oath, when he testified under oath that he had so often considered other values more important than truth? The colonel's involvement in covert activities and his admitted zeal for covering them up have impugned, if they did not destroy, his credibility. He insisted, for example, that he did not know whether Mr. Reagan had approved or was aware of the diversion of arms profits to the contras. He insisted however, that throughout the Iranian and Nicaraguan operations he had assumed that Mr. Reagan approved. But he could not recall on what basis or on whose assurance he had made that assumption.

If he told the truth on all three points, he loyally excused Mr. Reagan from knowledge which the latter claims not to have had, but also exonerated himself from having acted without what he believed to be proper authorization. But why should he be believed now when he so clearly told the committee that in the past he not only was willing to lie, but believed it justified to lie, to protect his superiors and their secret operations? Too Bad It's Washington, But Hamilton Did a Deal profoundly warped by the founding fathers' greatest mistake: moving the capital from Philadelphia. Washington was set apart in the beginning. Thus the illusion that the federal government was isolated from the affairs of the country, or an interloper, was given physical form.

The word "Washington" became a symbol of illegitimate power in rhetoric employed to arouse discontent without resolving the problems that gave rise to it. Use of the symbol reached a crescendo under Presidents Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan. In 1985 Mr. Reagan denounced the capital as "un-American."

The distortion exists from both perspectives. From the Potomac, America appears mostly as shadows racing across a distant landscape. From time to time they intrude and disturb the elegance of expertise. By making the capital artificial, the founders made difficult its mission of giving coherence to a diverse country.

The Constitution, of course, stip ed that a capital be designated. But transplanting the federal government from the second English-speaking city in the world after London to a desolate swamp was hardly inevitable. Nor was the new capital framed in the spirit that was later claimed for it, as an assertion of the new republic's self-creating ability. Rather, Washington was born in a deal: a spirit that would animate many of the capital's future inhabitants.

The placement of the capital on the Potomac was the solution to what seemed to be an intractable problem: paying the debt incurred by the states during the Revolution. Alexander Hamilton wanted the federal government to assume the debt, the better to bind the banks to the central government. The Southerners opposed his plan. Over dinner, Hamilton and Thomas Jefferson worked out a compromise. The federal government would assume the debt in exchange for the construction of a new capital in Virginia. Hamilton was a centralizer, who believed that in the deal his principle triumphed. In fact he cared little where the capital was located, having scant attachment to any particular American place. He was, after all, born in Barbados, "the bastard son of a Scotch ped-lar," as John Adams acidly remarked. He failed to grasp that location is everything. By trading the capital for debt America ever having its own London.

As part of the deal, Philadelphia became the federal city from 1790 to 1800, when the new capital of mud and mosquitoes was ready. The Washington of 1930 still had fewer dimensions as a city than the Philadelphia of 130 years earli-er, In 1800, Philadelphia was the leading WASHINGTON — For almost 200 American city in population, culture, years, American politics has been finance, industry and architecture. As the capital, it might well have grown organically into a true national center.

Philadelphia was a city of all classes, from bankers to artisans. The forces contending for power in the country were represented by more than repre-sentatives. Underlying shifts in the economy registered instantly among the citizenry, who rode the cycles of boom and bust. And those citizens organized into political societies, unions and associations to express their interests.

The capital was insulated from the social effects of commerce — and the coming industrial revolution. The representative classes of American life never thrived in the one-company town of Washington. The direct effects of both economic growth and suffering have always been filtered into the capital, almost as if they were abstractions.

Even partisanship, the stock in trade of Washington, appears here in an oddly muted form. Absent is the strong presence of local party organizations. By contrast, during Philadelphia's decade as the seat of government the Democratic Society, the local branch of the swelling Jeffersonian party, had a large and active base in the community; about a quarter of the members were artisans. The Democrats' battle for control of government with the dominant Federalists played out locally as the same fight raged nationally. From city to state to central government, there was no political discontinuity. The passing of George Washington in December 1799 was mourned in Philadelphia as the passing of its days as capital. Adams lived only two years in the presidential mansion at 190 High Street before leaving for the White House, still under construction.

A Potomac capital was Washington's dream long before he became president. He imagined a truly national center, unit-ed to the burgeoning West by a Potomac Canal connecting the Potomac and Ohio rivers; the effect on Virginia, the leading Southern state, would be to spur industry and gradually make slavery uneconomical. Then he planned to erect a national university "to spread systematic ideas through all parts of the rising empire." The canal was never built, the university never founded. When Washington died, wrote Brook Adams, he left "his federal capital, which should have been the focus of American exchanges, indus-try and thought, little better than a wilderness." More than anything else, the Civil War dramatized the failed dream of a unifying capital.

Philadelphia missed its chance. Today, to get the effect George Washington -a city at the heart of the economy, with great universities - the capital would have to go to Chicago, which has two major league baseball teams.

As longtime Trib columnist Art Buchwald put it, "By the time you finish pronouncing it, you've missed your plane?" But the name stuck - for formal purposes, at least usually shortened to "Trib" or "HHT" or sometimes "Herald" by readers, advertisers and employees around the world. Underneath the nameplate a new line of type also appeared, reflecting the new ownership: "Published with The New York Times and The Washington Post." But the order in which those two names were to appear was never discussed as the new business arrangements were worked out. Only when all else was settled did Katharine Graham, Publisher of the Post, and Arthur O. Sulzberger, Publisher of the Times, raise the matter with one another. The solution was to have the coin. Mrs. Graham made - should live. He had, in fact, The May 22d sertlement

For beginning in 1960, The New York Times published its own Paris-based International Edition, one which never quite overtook the Trib but which did slow its papers in 1958. The key development in saving the Paris edition came when the Washington Post Co. decided to join Whitney in its ownership — not only as a source of additional capital but as a source of news as well.

The Whitney-Post merger was first suggested by Whitney Communications Co. president Walter Thayer to Mrs. Graham at a dinner at Art Buchwald's Washington home in the summer of 1966. By August a general agreement had been reached and on Dec. 5, 1966 the nameplate was changed to reflect the Post's new role. Convinced now that the Paris Trib would not fade from the scene, the Times reacted quickly. the agreement was an unexpected circulation leap. Before the merger, Times sales had been a bit under 50,000, Trib sales a bit over that number. But within five months of the merger, sales exceeded 96,000, passing 100,000 a year later and 120,000 by 1971. The number of pages also began to grow - as both news content and advertising expanded. North Stars as the Cocky, Can-Do Marine but Refuses to Swallow All of the Blame

Officer Indicates Top U.S. Officials Sought to Deceive

By Haynes Johnson Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - Nearly eight months ago a lawyer representing Lieutenant Colonel Oliver L. North said the Marine Corps officer wanted "to step forward and take the spears in his own chest" in the Iran-contra affair. Colonel North testified Tuesday that he planned to be the "scapegoat."

But when his moment came to take the fall before a congressional inquiry, he did not it turned out that the former National Security Council aide — although willing to field a few spears — had no intention of bearing the blame

By the time he finished his first day on the witness stand, Colonel North had, in effect, accused numerous cabinet-level members in the administration of President Ronald Reagan of conniving to provide false information to the president, Congress and the American people. He also raised new problems for Mr. Reagan with testimony that he had sent not one but five memorandums "up the line" seeking the president's approval for arms deals with Iran that.

"I didn't make a lot of the decisions I'm accused of making," Colonel North said. Later, he referred bitterly to "a whole cadence of people" among top administration officials who "wittingly" knew of false cover stories being promulgated last fall after the Iran-contra scandal erupted, causing him to be dismissed from his government post.

He added: "I didn't consider myself to be the

That wasn't what I heard while I worked there. I've only heard it since I left.

People used to walk up to me and tell me what a great job I was doing. Irreverently, He Promises Good, Bad and Ugly'

By Maureen Dowd

WASHINGTON - Through the smirks and winks and teary eyes, through the "Peck's Bad Boy" grins and the earnest altar-boy gazes, Lieutenant Colonel Oliver L. North seemed, as always, to be starring in his own movie.

He even borrowed a title from a gritty Clint Eastwood western for the occasion. "I came here to tell you the truth — the good, the bad and the ugly," the Marine Corps officer said as he broke his long silence and began his public testimony before an enthralled Senate chamber

He might have added "the irreverent" to the list. Even though he was, to use his own argot, "up to his ears in alligators," Colonel North had a hard time curtailing his cocky streak. Just as he once considered Congress too cumbersome to be let in on grandiose international schemes, his sly grin and his often overly polite tone seemed to say that he considered this public bloodletting - not his own actions

"I didn't want to show Congress a single

Indeed, he seemed oblivious to the fact that government investigators have been chipping away at his straight-arrow image, and he unabashedly played up his "can do" persona.

He sarcastically referred to the "heroes" who had disclosed that he and Mr. Casey had cooked up a story that the Central Intelligence Agency had carried oil drilling equipment— rather than Hawk missiles — to Iran. Asked about the memorandums that he had sent to his boss, Vice Admiral John M. Poindexter, seeking the president's approval on the diversion of money from the Iran arms sales to the Nicaragean rebels, the 43-year-old marine said blithely: "I think I shredded most of that. Did I get 'em all?"

A little later, as he wavered on the issue of which documents he had destroyed, he joked to the straight-faced legislators, "My memory has been shredded."

When John W. Nields Jr., the House committee counsel, told the colonel that he was going to ask him after the morning break about false statements he had helped put together on ship-ments of arms to Iran, Colonel North did not

At White House, No Time to View North Testimony

WASHINGTON - As Reagan administration officials tell it, the White House might have been the only place in the capital Tuesday where workers were not watching the televised testimony of Lieuten ant Colonel Oliver L. North.

Neither President Ronald Reagan, nor his chief aides, they said, had time to watch Colonel North's account of the Iran-contra affair.

"I don't think they've had a chance" to watch the hearings, said the chief White House spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater. Mr. Fitzwater said he had watched about 10 minutes of the testimony, the first time Colonel North has given his own version of the affair since it was disclosed more than seven months ago. The White House staff moni-

Fetal Tissue May Aid in Transplants

ROCHESTER, New York (NYT) - Scientists at a conference here effective in establishing truths said that they expected to experiment soon with transplanting animal or human fetal tissue into patients' brains to replace the destroyed cells that account for Parkinson's disease. Experiments with transplants of a patient's own adrenal gland tissue are promising, but researchers said that animal experiments indicate fetal tissue might prove more effective.

In Sweden, researchers have transplanted human fetal brain tissue in superior to knowledge derived Newtonian universe," Buffon said animals and plan to try using human letal tissue in patients, perhaps in a year. But use of human fetal tissue is controversial and banned in some referring particularly to the Roman naturelle." "There are very few countries. In the United States, experiments with human fetal tissue are legal in most states.

The search is on for an abundant source of such embryonic tissue, advantageously. And I scarcely see researchers said, and among the candidates is the pig. Tissue from unborn ry. The Philosophes thought his anything but astronomy and optics pigs was inserted into the brains of rats. Although derived from a methods could be applied not just to which they might be of any great different species, the inserted cells prospered and established contact with the nervous system of the brain.

Hypertension Linked to Erratic Diets

CHICAGO (AP) - Animal studies suggest that overweight people who go on crash diets and then resume eating large amounts may risk developing high blood pressure, a researcher says.

"Our findings may serve as another precantion against erratic swings in food intake," said Douglas O. Nelson, associate professor of physiology at Northwestern University, who directed the experiments.

"It is commonly assumed that blood pressure in humans is affected by body weight and that weight loss through calorie restriction will effective ly lower blood pressure," he said. "But we can conclude from our animal model that eating patterns and nutritional state — not body weight changes — may be better predictors of blood pressure change."

In the experiment, 19 rats were made overweight. The researchers then allowed nine of the rats to overfeed continuously for 18 weeks, while they subjected the other 10 to alternating periods of fasting and feasting. He said they found that blood pressure was unaffected in the rats that overled constantly, while the periodically fasted rats became hyperten-

Trees May Be a Source of Pollution

WASHINGTON (AP) - Government researchers, in a report that could revive the "killer tree" jokes of Ronald Reagan's 1980 presidential campaign, say new measurements show that trees may contribute to acid rain and other pollution. The annual report for 1986 of the National Acid Precapitation Assess ment Program noted that volatile organic compounds react in sunlight with nitrogen oxides produced by combustion to form ozone, an important ground-level pollutant although at high altitude it is a shield against the sun's harmful ultraviolet rays.

Volatile organics also form other oxidizing compounds such as hydrogen peroxide, which scientists believe is responsible for 70 to 80 percent with the cloistered academic life at of the transformation of sulfur dioxide from power plant and industrial

Aged Dairy Product Dug Up in a Bog

TIPPERARY, Ireland (AP) - A large lump of cheese or butter estimated to be up to 1,400 years old has been found in a bog in County

Tipperary by workmen digging peat, an archaeologist reported.
"We think it would still be edible but we're not keen on trying it as it seems from the depth at which it was found to have been buried in the fifth or sixth century A.D.," Tony Candon said. He said the lump, found under five feet (1.5 meters) of bog, required two men to lift it.

Mr. Clandon said the lump would be turned over to agricultural scientists to examine. He said the wrapping was more important than the food for what it could tell about ancient crafts. "We don't know for sure what the wrapping is but it looks like some kind of wickerwork," he said.

INTERNATIONAL MANAGER

As Ethics Courses Multiply, Prospective Tycoons Shrug

By SHERRY BUCHANAN

ONDON - A growing number of business schools and management education programs are offering business ethics courses for the first time or expanding such programs. The renewed interest in ethics may result from a sense of collective guilt: Some of the executives and brokers accused of illegal insider trading in the City of London or on Wali Street are former students. Martin A. Siegel, a former merger specialist with Kidder, Peabody & Co. who pleaded guilty in February to two felony counts in an insider trading case, is a Harvard Business School

Harvard Business School is currently raising $30 million to fund a business ethics program. John S.R. Shad, the former head of the Securities and Exchange Commission and a past vice chairman of E.F. Hutton & Co., is providing the bulk of the endowment to show students that "ethics

"Managers are mainly concerned with being competitive," an educator said.

London Business School introduced a business ethics course last year for the first time, as did the Istituto de Estudios Superiores de la Empresa, or IESE, in Barcelona, one of Spain's leading business schools. The European Foundation for Management Development in Brussels, a training organization, is planning to hold a business ethics symposium for managers in November.

But business ethics courses have yet to reach the top of the popularity charts with graduate business students or managers. The majority of students seeking an MRA, or masters degree in business administration, prefer to take courses that they believe will yield instant payoffs when they step into the real world. Business Ethics doesn't qualify.

Companies enroll their managers in outside programs either to sharpen specific business skills, as in finance, management, communications, marketing, or sales, or to improve their health.

F "we tried to offer a business ethics course, I don't think there would be too many takers," said Philip Sadler, a principal at Ashridge College of Management, one of the largest management training programs in England. Mr. Sadler sees the need for a more ethical orientation in business, but the college does not offer any courses with "ethics" in the title.
"Managers are mainly concerned with being competitive," Mr.

Sadler said. "They have to balance ethics against survival."
Last year, only 65 MBA students enrolled in Harvard Business School's "Ethical Aspects of Corporate Policy" class, which was introduced in 1978. But 400 students enrolled in a course entitled Power and Influence."

Even if business ethics courses are not sellouts, the more philosophically oriented MBA students and managers are concerned about what they should or should not do in business.

"People who came to the business ethics course were the more thoughtful types who were less immediately interested in things which could benefit them," said Andrew Likierman, a senior lecturer at London Business School For example, students in his othics class asked whether compa nies should invest in countries with repressive regimes, and if managers had a moral responsibility to disclose more information than what was absolutely required to shareholders.

Some educators argue that the best way to interest students and managers in business ethics is to incorporate case studies that raise ethical questions into other courses, such as Business Policy, International Management or Organizational Behavior.

Even those in favor of teaching business ethics still point out that the system can corrupt.

"The style of the company follows what the men at the top do," said Neville Cooper, chairman of the Institute of Business Ethics in Loudon. "Many young people who go into business have principles, but it is very hard for them when the atmosphere where they work isn't going their way."

Earnings At Allegis Up 299%

United Airlines Still to Cut Jobs

CHICAGO -- Allegis Corp. reported a 299 percent increase in second-quarter earnings Wednesday, a day after a cut was aninced in 250 management jobs at United Airlines.

The parent company of United Airlines, Hertz car rental and the Westin and Hilton hotel chains said quarterly earnings jumped to $73.4 million or $1.29 per share from $18.4 million or 41 cents a share last year. Sales were $2.88 billion, up from

U.S. Airlines: The Digital Dogfight Battle Heats Up Over Computer Reservation Systems

By Martha M. Hamilton

Washington Past Service
WASHINGTON — One of the hardest-fought marketing battles in the U.S. airline industry involves not discount fares or frequent flier programs but computer reservation systems.

In just a few years, these systems have become tools of critical importance, radically transforming the distribution system through which airline tickets are sold, and offering carriers once undreamed of opportunities for fine tuning their marketing.

In 1978, the year the skies over the United States were deregulated, U.S. airlines carried about 235 million passengers, who, typically, booked their own flights. Travel agents handled about 38 percent of the volume.

This year, U.S. airlines are expected to carry more than 415 million passengers. Travel agents, using computer reservation systems, will sell most of those tickets --- more than 80 percent for domestic trips and more than 90 percent for international

The major airlines are becoming technology companies in addition to transportation companies. The computer operation "is the heart of the airline," according to Barry A. Kotar, president of the Allegis Corp. subsidiary that runs United Airline's Apollo computer reservation system. "The whole airline couldn't operate without it."

As the importance of these systems has grown so have concerns about their use. Smaller airlines which pay transaction fees for tickets booked through one of the systems, have complained that those fees are too high. They say that the contracts binding them to a system are too restrictive and that the systems may give the airlines operating them an unfair advantage.

This year the Department of Transportation announced that it would investigate computer res-ervation systems to determine whether the power that the systems confer was being abused, a charge often levied by airlines that do not have systems Members of Congress also have expressed concerns, and 13 carriers have filed suit against American Airlines and United, charging those two with using their systems in an anti-competitive manner.

"It's probably one of the most important areas in aviation economics right now in terms of competitive relationships between carriers and the effect on consumers and travel agents," said Matthew V. Scocozza, the Transportation Department's assistant secretary for policy and international affairs. He added that "my whole See COMPUTERS, Page 13

Mr. Holmes à Court, who is famed for his astute purchases of undervalued companies, had any number of options for his investment, including an eventual takeover bid should he care to make it.

In a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission in Washington, Mr. Holmes à Court indicated that companies he controls held about 18.04 million commo. shares of Texaco, including 2.53 million shares purchased at prices ranging from $36.37% to $41 a share between May 20 and July 2. When Mr. Holmes à Court, Aus-flurry of trading in Texaco shares. By Wednesday afternoon their price had risen 371/2 cents, to $45.121/2, and were the fourth most actively traded issue on the New York Stock Exchange.

The latest disclosure came amid continuing speculation over whether Texaco was near a settlement of its multibilion-dollar legal battle with Pennzoil Co. Texaco is appealing a $10.35 billion judgment that a Texas state court jury awarded after Pennzoil alleged that Texaco had improperly interfered in 1984 with an attempted merger with Getty Oil Co.

Mr. Holmes à Court's filing said that his companies "have not yet determined if any of them is willing to serve on such a committee."

Senate Asks Ban On Certain Loans

WASHINGTON - The U.S. Senate Wednesday barred U.S. approval of multilateral development bank loans that would help poor countries produce any crop or mineral in oversupply and voted sanctions for such loans. It still must go to the House.

U.S. representatives to the World Bank and other lending institutions would be required to vote against loans for products in surplus, whether or not their production would be for domestic use. The United States would be required to withhold its share of the fund-

Tokyo Stock Prices Fall With Fears on Dollar, Drop in Bonds, Oil Cost

Renters

TOKYO — Share prices took another dive on the Tokyo market Wednesday with investors increasingly pessimistic over falling bond prices, the strong dollar and fears of rising oil prices, brokers said.

Tokyo's 225-share index lost 343.67 points in moderate trading to end at 23,472.42, the fifth session in a row in which prices have dropped. "There is a broad-based sentiment things are not going too well," a broker from Sanyo Securities said.

Brokers said some institutional investors and

Brokers said some institutional investors and other fund managers have about 60 percent of their funds in cash, and one foreign broker said:
"We are simply not recommending any buying at the moment."

Securities houses, electronics, insurance, pharmacentical, bank, gas and some other financials lost most heavily. Brokers said prices would have to fall further before stocks would look cheap enough to be a good buy.

The market has been depressed since June 17 when it hit a record of 25,929.42. Cash has been generally moving from Tokyo stocks into dollar-based investments, particularly U.S. government securities. The dollar topped 150 yen in New York overnight for the first time in three and a half months and remained strong Wednesday, ending the day in Tokyo at 150.25 yen.

Some currency dealers expect the dollar to extend its rise to about 152 yen during the rest

TOKYO - Officials from Japan's major commercial banks met Wednesday to discuss Bank America Corp.'s request for help in rebuilding its equity base, sources said, but most remained noncom-mittal because participation could undermine their efforts to boost primary capital.

Details of the discussions were not known, but they concerned BankAmerica's request that Japanese banks buy $250 million in subordinated capital notes it plans to

"Unless we clear the capital adequacy problem, we won't be able to buy BankAmerica's subordinated notes even if we want to" a senior official at a leading bank said.

He said many Japanese bank officials are sympathetic toward Ban-kAmerica's financial plight and want to help, but that "this doesn't necessarily mean we would be willing to go along with their capital Banks would be required to deduct the value of such subordinated notes from their primary capital, under regulations proposed by U.S. and British authorities. Japanese banks are under pressure from abroad to boost their capital. The banking sources said they doubted the meeting would produce any specific agreement, except on the need to ask authorities to allow them to treat the BankAmerica case as an exception to the capital adequacy requirements.

The sources said that those present at the meeting, held at the Tokyo headquarters of Mitsui Bank Ltd., were the senior officials from some 10 major banks.

Japanese securities houses and life insurance companies have been asked to buy $100 million in preferred stock, the sources said, and a top BankAmerica official is expected to come to Tokyo early next week seeking their help.

Dollar Holds Above 150 Yen Level

LONDON — The dollar ended mainly firmer Wednesday and well above the psychologically unportant level of 150 year after earlygains led by its advance against the lananese currency.

Dealers said that trading was dominated by technical factors and was likely to remain so throughout

Indonesia Forces Dollar Sell-Off

JAKARTA -- The Indone-Sian government has withdrawn massive amounts of rupiahs, the local currency, from state banks, forcing a big sell-off of the dollar and sending overnight interbank call money rates as high as 40 percent, bankers said Wednesday.

The government late last week withdrew 800 billion rupiah ($486 million) in time deposits and other accounts owned by four big state-owned firms. Officials said the move was made to end a speculative rush to exchange rupiahs for dollars.
The withdrawais prevented state banks from lending rupiahs to banks and business speculators who led the nish for dollars. Dollar-buying, feeding on rumors of devaluation or possible controls, began in May and reached $1.7 billion.

Eased at Troubled Banks

WASHINGTON — Federal regulators have eased the cash reserve rules apply to banks in any state requirements for banks operating in economically depressed areas of the United States, signaling concern over the continuing rise in the number of troubled U.S. banks.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency announced Tuesday that, effective immediately, any bank that can demonstrate that it is suffering from an economic downturn rather than bad management will be permitted to let cash reserves fall below the level normally required.

The two agencies also removed limits on how far reserves could drop. They said cash reserve levels would be approved case by case, but that no insolvent bank would be allowed to stay open.

The new rules significantly broaden a policy adopted in March 1986, which regulators called a estimated that several thousand "forbearance" plan intended to banks would be eligible to take adhelp troubled banks in farm and vantage of the new rules.

The agencies also added two years to the time limit qualifying banks will have to restore capital to normal levels. Banks now will have to restore capital reserves to 6 percent of assets by Dec. 31, 1995.

Capital, the difference between assets and liabilities, is intended as a cushion against loan losses. Normally, a bank's limit on lending is based on capital reserves. Under the forbearance rules, regulators have said. banks will be able to amortize certain loan losses rather than taking a single, direct loss, which will boost a bank's assets for purposes of calculating how much money it can lend. The regulators also extended the deadline for eligibility under the new policy to Dec. 31, 1989.

Texas Air has been plowing that ground aggressively, offering in-centives to switch to System One and helping travel agents who want to switch by either buying out the agency's contract with a competitor's system or by helping the agency to litigate.

System One is involved in 10 cases in which travel agents and either American or United are litigating over how much the agency owes the airline for canceling a contract before the expiration date.

last year, the crown jewel in the transaction was System One, Building a computer reservation system from scratch is expensive and difficuit. Texas Air got its hands on an existing system, as did Northwest Airlines, which paid $140 million for a half interest in Pars last year. Allegis, which is selling off a number of non-airline subsidiaries in an effort to prevent a takeover, said last month that it also will sell an interest in Apollo.

Texas Air, the largest U.S. airline company, and the parent corporation of Continental and Eastern, dominates the industry in many respects. Its low labor costs have forced other airlines to rewrite their labor agreements, and its deep discounts have set the pace for fare pricing. But in computer reservation systems, Texas Air is the one trying to increase its share in a saturated market

MAJOR ANDRÉ

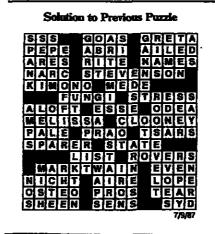

J tary glory, survives as a footnote to the U.S. War of Independence, although the circumstances surrounding his death have insured that he is better remembered than many of the panders in that conflict. He was the British officer sent to negotiate with Benedict Ar-nold for the betrayal of West Point, in 1780. Detained by three irregulars on his way back to New York, he was handed over to Washington's forces, tried, and executed as a spy.

Andre's charm and accomplishme courage with which he died, and the question of whether he shouldn't have been spared whether what he did really amounted to being a spy --- all these combined to invest him with the aura of a tragic hero in the eyes of many contemporaries, American no less than British.

Now he has found his way into a novel—a compact, tightly organized novel that confines itself to the last five days of his life. True, as he meditates or talks to his captors in the book we also learn a good deal about what has led him to his plight: he gives a detailed account of the previous week's adventures, interspersed with memories of earlier times. But some of the most colorful episodes in his career are pass over in silence or barely mentioned - the elaborate mock-tournament he helped to organize while stationed in Philadelphia, for exam-ple. In writing about him, Anthony Bailey has set out to produce a concentrated portrait rather than an all-inclusive chronicle.

At first glance "Major André" wears the air of a sophisticated romance, a boy's book for grown-ups in the spirit of Robert Louis Steven-son. Certainly a good deal of straightforward excitement is generated by such scenes as André's first clandestine interview with Arnold, and his various encounters on the road during his attempt to ride back to the safety of British lines at "the White Plains."

One of the great appeals of Andre as 2 narrator, however, is that he was a man of sensibility as well as a man of action — a talented amateur artist (as the end approached, he found solace in sketching), an advoit versifier, a man who read widely, and remembered what he read. Before he enlisted he had been in love with a young woman called Honora Sneyd who belonged to a circle of progressive-minded literati living in the English cathedral town of Lichield, and he had imbibed many of their ideas

On board the ship that has taken him up the Hudson, for instance, he is unable to sleep at night, and strains to see whether he can make out snything on the river: "The mist held like crystals whatever light there was in the darkness; there were no shapes, nothing of sub-stance, only the shrouds shimmering in the moisture-filled air." Again, in the garden of the house where he is being held prisoner he watches "a fuzzy or-ange-and-brown caterpillar working its way over a fallen leaf, arching its back, straighten-ing out, arching its back, straightening out, and he wonders about the purpose, if any, of its mission. But short quotations, though they may serve to remind us what an excellent travel writer and reporter Bailey has shown himself to be in earlier books, fail to do him justice. here. They can't convey the cumulative effect of writing that is both sturdy and elegant but that doesn't draw attention to its own virtues. The style is the man, the man in this case & being John André. An engaging figure, frank. high-spirited, dashing, but not impossibly so.

attractive hero, and succeeded. Naturally, the André of the novel has his limitations. As he himself acknowledges, there is a recurrent strain of the actor in him, from his talk of stage fright at the outset of his mission to his final vision, a moment before he is hanged, of receiving roars of applause from an imaginary auditorium. And there is a boyish, unreflecting aspect to his ambitions that is sharply brought out by a passage in which he recalls his fascination when he was a child — little Jack André — with all the Jacks who are featured in nursery rhymes and folk tales, but most of all with Jack the Giant Killer.

Yet our respect for him increases as the story progresses. The last part of the book is a lesson in the art of facing death: Bailey is less interested in the rights and wrongs of the decision to execute André than in the manner in which he comported himself - not without hopes of a reprieve, not without sad thoughts, not without revulsion at the prospect of being hanged rather than shot, but with a determination to adhere to his code of honor and (you might say) his sense of style. The portrait is a powerful one, and never strains belief; Bailey has taken the known facts about the last days and hours of Andre, and used a novelist's license to give them added psychological depth.

BRIDGE

By Alan Truscott ONE OF the most success-ful and popular American women in bridge, Evelyn Levitt, died last month at the age

Levitt had almost completed Bridge.

Toronto a year ago. This vic- postponed.

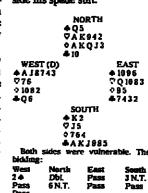

Levitt's partnership with Dave Treadwell was one of the most enduring among top-ranked players. It went back amost three decades, and the diagramed deal was played by them in 1964.

When Treadwell as North the match-points. She knew doubled the opening weak that West held at least one two-bid in spades Levitt queen for a subtle reason that jumped to three no-trump. A Hot Afternoon at Wrigley Field

After Eric Show hit Andre Dawson in the face with a thirdinning pitch (far left), the San Diego pitcher was set upon (center) by a swarm of angry Chicago Cubs, among them Leon Durham, left, and John Vukovich. Dawson, who in the first inning had hit his third home run in two days against the Padres, was understandably dazed - he would need 21 stitches inside and outside his mouth - but when he got up (above), he got up sprinting. Show, who by then had found a little running room of his own, wisely opted for the sanctuary of the San Diego dugout.

homer by Paul Noce; as he hit the dirt, Rick Sutcliffe bolted out of the Chicago dugout and went for Show, and players from both teams poured onto the field. Dawson, who had homered twice against San Diego on Monday, remained face-down on the ground for nearly a minute, but when he got up he went after Show and another melee broke out.

Dawson and Sutcliffe were ejected, as was teammate Manny Trillo. Starting pitcher Greg Maddux and Manager Gene Michael were center will be 36.

A broken navicular bone in his right foot limited Walton to 10 regular-season games and 12 of Boston's 23 playoff games in 1986-87.

He elected to have surgery aimed at eliminating the pressure thought responsible for the fracture.

A foot injury sidelined Walton for the 1978-79 season. He played Pittsburgh 14 games with the San Diego Clippers the next year, but sat out the following two seasons after under-going left-foot surgery similar to Tuesday's.

"That's too bad. You bin enjoyin' yourself?"
"Yeah, Bob. It's been my favorite tour in the world."

This dialogue can be found on Page 250 of "And a Voice to Sing With," Joan Baez's new book about her much-lived life and

"Yes, and you should see what got left on the cutting-room floor about Bobby," she says. Joan Baez is 46 and has a teen-

She was 18 when she stepped into the pre-narcotic pop American night at the 1959 Newport Folk Festival. She had learned how to flutter her voice by standing in the shower in her parents' home and bobbing her index finger up and down her throat.

An old tolkie named Bob Gibson brought her up on stage that night at Newport. People were going off for coffee. She and Gibson had earlier met and sung at the Gate of Horn club in Chicago. They sang "Jordan River." Suddenly it was as if a bell had just rung in a schoolyard of memory.

Three years later, at 21, Joan Bacz was on the cover of Time And then: "I think it had to magazine. Nothing to it. She was "Anything called a hootenanny her eight years to get a label. The ought to be shot on sight, but the label, Gold Castle Records, has whole country is having one,"

"You see, first, it was disbelief. Disbelief and then denial. Then you start to blame everybody: They don't have any taste, they're stupid, they have something against me.' Finally it begins to dawn on you that times have changed in 25 years."

Her marriage to the beach-boy-handsome, anti-war activist David Harris was supposed to be '60s perfect — his fire, her music, together their glory. It didn't work out that way. Harris went to prison for resisting the draft, and then they couldn't get along, and then it was over.

Six or seven years ago, when things were at about their darkest, Joan Baez, of the aching soprano, went to get vocal lessons, just walked in cold one day to a Palo Alto studio not far from her home down on the Peninsula.

"What seems to be the prob lem?" the teacher said. "Uh, my voice is not working right. I'm having trouble with the high notes.

Do you sing professionally, or just for your own pleasure?" "I sing professionally."
"I see. What's your name?" 'Joan_" "Joan what?"

A portrait showing the murdered pop star John Lennon wearing a crown of thorns has triggered a row in the former Beatle's hometown of Liverpool. The painting, by the West German artist J.L. Stengel, has gone on show 20 years after Lennon caused a storm by suggesting the Beatles, then the country's most successful group, were more popular than Christ. A Liverpool churchman demanded that the painting be taken out of the exhibition, which is due to go to Texa: later this mouth.

The former U.S. ambassador to Moscow Thomas J. Watson Jr. flew a Lear jet into Moscow Tuesday to commemorate his 1942 flight that was part of a U.S.-Soviet airlift during World War II.
